“I’ve resigned myself to
the fact that things,
from cabbages to kings
and sealing wax, are all one glorious, actually glorious mess.”

Clement Greenberg : The Harold Letters, 1928-1965: The Making of an American Intellectual before purchasing it in order to gauge whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised The Harold Letters, 1928-1965: The Making of an American Intellectual:

In The Harold Letters, Janice Van Horne, Clement Greenberg's widow, has gathered together Greenberg's letters as a young man to his then friend and confidant, Harold Lazarus. Spanning fifteen years, this collection of letters intimately chronicles the development of Greenberg's taste and ideas. The Harold Letters is frequently funny and always candid, revealing the young Greenberg's passion, ambition, and intellectualism that would lead to his future status as the greatest art critic of the twentieth century.
