This book takes a bird's eye view of architecture in time, and explores the different ways architects have responded to civilizations, giving them the buildings and cities they deserve.

About the Author After a career in design and architectural journalism, being part of the founding team of Design Week, working for Architect's Journal, and editing both Interior Design and Design magazines, Gaynor Aaltonen spent a number of years as editor of the National Trust magazine. She was also author of Spooks: Behind the Scenes (Orion) and is now a freelance writer and communications consultant.
